

Richardson's extrapolation is used to generate high-accuracy results while using low-order formulas.

Extrapolation can be applied whenever it is known that an approximation technique has an error term with a predictable form, one that depends on a parameter, usually the step size h .